man Carrington heard his snoring.

"Get up there and go home," was what the officer told the old man, but he only snored all the louder. Finally, he was aroused and asked to tell where he lived.

"In Soldiers' Home," was his response, but before he got to the police station he changed his mind and said," I work for the President." Following this he abused the officer and a young man who had assisted in making the arrest.

in making the arrest.

"You will have to pay a fine of 5." but he only had 34 in his pocket. This satisfied the court and the old man paid the money and went home.

Arthur Vincent, a young colored man, said he was guilty of a charge of disorderly conduct and went down in default of the usual fine.

After the Walts Was Over. A neatly dressed man named John H. Stevens was next called to answer a charge vagrancy and suspicion. he case was brought in from the "divis-

A waltz in Holmes' saloon seemed to have cut a figure in the case. "And after the waltz was over." said Policeman Sutton, "the man discovered that he had been robether.

Stevens told a straightforward story of all doings in the saloon and denied the harge made against him. "Black-haired dag." as he styled the witness, waltzed with the man, so he said, and she was linging him about over chairs and under ables. tables.
Judge Taylor heard proof to show that Stevens was a hard-working man and dismissed the case.
There were two charges against a colored man named Peter Robnison. The charges were disorderly conduct and vagrancy.
"I'm guilty of being disorderly," was his plea, "but I am not a vagrant." Victoria Winston, a colored woman, appeared against him and told of his conduct. She said that he waited at a back door to see her and wanted her to give him some "She owes me the money," was the man's plea, but the evidence was against him and he will not need any funds for ninety
